The Dynamic Duo

Y1 Shakespeare

Once upon a time there was a dynamic duo. A fiery, yapping parrot called Robin and her clever best friend Ella. They lived deep in the dark, foggy jungle surrounded by vicious and sometimes kind animals. Ella and Robin were born in the jungle and had been left to fend for themselves from a young age. They were always getting up to no good, disturbing the peace, making fun of the monkeys and pranking the king of the jungle, Tatu the terrific tiger.

In the jungle life was extremely hard and these two friends had been struggling from an early age. They had no clue who their parents were and always tried to make lots of new friends by being silly and loud. The other animals were so upset with all the jokes and pranks. They had ENOUGH! In the jungle, there was a large, overarching tree called the Holy Tree where the two would come to get away from everyone. This place was special and Ella and Robin were not allowed to go there. It was forbidden.

They were fortunate that no one had seen them near the Holy Tree. Ella and Robin continued playing pranks on the other animals. One day the animals followed the naughty parrots. The animals discovered Ella and Robin's secret place... the forbidden Holy Tree! The kind pandas didn't want to get these two into trouble, however the vicious snakes decided to tell on them.

The animals disagreed amongst themselves. Soon the jungle animals became divided and it was no longer a happy place. Some animals supported the snake's decision while the others took the side of the pandas. Ella and Robin were terrified. What would become of us? they thought. They did not want Tatu the tiger to find out that they had entered the forbidden Holy Tree.

Ella and Robin realized that they were in deep trouble, so they decided to apologise to all the animals for their behaviour. However, Tatu the tiger, Leon Bluey the lion and Venom the snake did not agree. They made such a loud noise that everything shook as if there was an earthquake. Even the Holy Tree shook. Suddenly, there was the most huge, enormous flash!! The animals blinked and looked to where the lion, tiger and snake had been. Instead, there were now three parrots!

Amazed, Robin and Ella could not believe their eyes! Had their luck changed? Would the three parrots still want to punish them? They were both confused about what to do. Incredibly, the three parrots seem to have forgotten what Robin and Ella had done. They kept saying, "Where are we? What are we doing here?"

Ella and Robin realised that they had actually fallen into a trap set by the other animals who were pretending to be parrots. They started to worry that there wouldn't be a way out. A rope suddenly hung from the sky and both Ella and Robin were trapped in two rusty cages. "Oh no!" shouted Robin. "We are trapped!"
"We have to find a way out soon!" exclaimed Ella.

As they struggled to find a way out, Ella noticed a small hole in her rusty cage and started pecking at it. She pecked and pecked and suddenly, she ended up in Robin's cage. Robin was relieved that he was no longer alone because he knew Ella would never leave him. Miraculously, they managed to squeeze their way out and flew graciously to The Holy Tree since they knew no one would be there. As they flew to the tree, the three parrots could hear their wings flapping in the distance. They knew where Ella and Robin were going so they immediately perched onto one of the branches close to the Holy Tree as they knew they were forbidden from entering the perimeter. However...

Ella and Robin still entered a hole in the Holy Tree. They could see leaves glistening like emeralds under the golden sun. As they went deeper into the Holy Tree, suddenly, they felt something tapping their shoulders. Feeling terrified, they started to turn back the other way but they couldn't see a way out as everything was dark. So now, they had no choice but to continue going further into the tree where there was a glimmer of light. They could feel the cold breeze running through their small bodies. Then, they stumbled upon a magic torch that led them to a beautiful, gold shining staff. They touched the staff and absorbed the heat from it which made them feel warm again. They realised that it must have been the staff tapping them earlier. Excitedly, they picked up the staff and, using the light beaming from it, they found a way out of the tree...

Ella and Robin decided to fly to another country as quickly as they could to get away from the three parrots who were bound to punish them after their latest adventure into the Holy Tree. They decided to go to Mexico because they hoped less predators lived there. They were spotted by some bystanders and were welcomed by the local people swatting them with beautifully decorated sombreros. After this welcome ceremony, they got themselves into a massive battle with a gang of eagles! Thankfully, the magical staff reversed the time back 5 minutes to give Ella and Robin time to escape. Hastily, they turned the corner and found themselves standing by a water fountain. After all this hullabaloo they started to bathe in the fountain as they were super hot. They began to cool down and enjoyed watching the cars zoom by on the nearby street. However, suddenly, three hands grabbed Ella and Robin's feet! They were dragged into a portal which transported them to an unknown dimension.

The dynamic duo were flung uncontrollably through the dimensions, whizzing through a multitude of bright colours as if they were in a running washing machine. Within a blink of an eye, they were thrown out of the dimension, they looked around. Confused. Baffled. Suddenly, it hit them: they were back in the old jungle. They realised they were back in the past and they thought they shouldn't be as frivolous as they used to be and to work on their weird behaviour. Nearby, they saw the Holy Tree; they didn't want to get close to it but they were unable to resist. They went to the Holy Tree and found out that it was home to many other parrots. Immediately, they recognised the three, transformed parrots and tried not to be too timid in their presence.

The parrots menacingly glared at them, remembering what mischievous behaviour they were involved in, but they decided to give them another chance. I wonder why, Ella and Robin wondered. They think it's another cunning trap and the two were more careful about thinking what awful schemes the parrots have got up their sleeves.

The three parrots saw that Ella and Robin were remorseful for their previous pranks. Ella and Robin stood, transfixed, not knowing what to do. They both thought about how to make the suspension go away. It was as if the faceless trees were staring at them with unblinking eyes. The duo decided to explore the rest of the frightening forest to investigate what the other animals were. They realised the utmost importance of returning the jungle to a more peaceful place.

Ella and Robin didn't know what to do. They wanted to make things right and change how others saw them. "What should we do?" asked Ella.

"I don't know," replied Robin. Then, suddenly, an idea struck Ella—an apology. Together, they decided to change. They let go of their troublesome behaviour and started to be kinder. As time passed, something magical happened—they began to glow. The jungle stirred, the trees and vines shifted, and the air felt peaceful once more.

Ella and Robin had learnt their lesson. Never again would they cause such trouble, no matter how tempting it might be.

The jungle remained perfect and beautiful... until, just for a moment, they forgot.

But the three wise, transformed birds knew one thing for certain—the world wouldn't be nearly as fun without a little good mischief.
